

The Cloud Hunter

In a faraway cloud I have seen one word.
I don't know this word, but that cloud, I know, thinks of you.
When you see that cloud, you will know that word: you will know its sound.
You will hear that cloud sing to you:
"May you be loved, my love!
We both know I'm not the one whom you will forever love, my love.
May you know I love you well."

It is hard to find clouds again.
Just like you, I know this well. I have seen you try.
So I've spent my day just to draw that cloud, so that you may hear when it sings to you:
"May you be loved, my love!
We both know I'm not the one whom you will forever love, my love.
May you know I love you well."

 The numbers in the rectangle refer to the grouping: this, for example, should feel like three equal beats in the measure, or as beats grouped in three. Each grouping is valid until a new grouping is specified.

During the verses, eighth notes in pairs should always be dragged, even if this is not marked with fermatas. However, one should still hear them as divisions of one somewhat longer beat. During the chorus, eighth notes should not be dragged.

Do not exaggerate any of the single fermatas: they should stretch the duration only slightly, and never destroy the metric flow.
